

Jessica Anderson is a trainer, facilitator, and minister who views learning as a revolutionary practice. She has a Bachelor of Arts from the University of Florida, Master of Public Administration from Georgia State, and her Master of Divinity from Howard University. She spent her career serving teens in foster care in South Florida, children and mothers in the shelter system in Atlanta, and working with youth advocates in 24 DC Public and Public Charter schools. She currently spends most of her days training an emerging generation of freedom fighters, water protectors, activists, and movement leaders through The Management Center. In ministry, she is in her tenth year as the Higher Ground youth leader at Alfred Street Baptist Church in Alexandria, VA.
